Lost Graveyard, Believed a Myth, Found in Orchard Near Frankstown

By JAMES W. HAYES

About 25 years ago a man, who said he came from a far western state, arrived in Hollidaysburg. He was smoothly shaven, about 50 years old and quite well dressed. It was his first visit east in several years, he said, and he was making inquiries concerning a small graveyard in the immediate vicinity. He did not give his name nor the name of any person supposed to be buried in the graveyard sought, but to one man he confided that he desired to find the grave of a certain child.

According to the visitor, there were from 40 to 50 bodies buried in the plot, which was situated on a high ridge overlooking the Juniata river. Those to whom he addressed his inquiries could give him but little information for the small graveyard known to them did not answer the description he gave. As his stay was of short duration and his quest advanced without much show of zeal, he and the graveyard he sought were soon forgotten.

The Lost Graveyard

For years past, especially during the fruit season, hundreds of persons from Blair and adjoining counties have gone to Brua's orchard. When they were allowed to pick fruit themselves, they roamed over the orchard, which is located on a high ridge, directly opposite Frankstown and overlooking the Juniata river. Many persons, time and again have climbed the ridge, passing and repassing a dense thicket adjoining

THE LOST GRAVEYARD

Here is the Lost Graveyard of the Juniata, as it appears today, with a few scattered headstones, revealed as the brush has been cleared away, the only traces to the 40 or 50 pioneers who are buried there.

the orchard, where a barrier of thorn bushes, brambles, trailing vines and sturdy locust trees repels all invaders.

In the midst of that thicket, unknown to the visitors, lies the Lost Graveyard of the Juniata.

Perhaps no one for years, except the owner, has visited this spot. It was covered with the undergrowth of a half century, concealing from view the weather beaten markers of the graves. In the center of the plot stands a giant oak tree, extending its mighty arms as though in perpetual benediction over the dead.

Beneath those rugged elms, the yew trees shade,

Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap,

Each in his narrow cell forever laid,

The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep."

It is impossible to determine the number of graves, as many of the markers are fallen and all vestige of some of the graves obliterated. They are arranged in five rows, and at the head of each is a slab of flat slate stone, each three inches thick, ten inches wide and about five feet long, if we include the part below ground.

These flat stones are not native to this side of the river, so evidently were obtained on McKillip's farm, on the opposite side of the Juniata, just west of Canoe Creek. Sometime ago the owner, Lynn A. Brua, had the farm hands clean up the plot. Two days were required to remove the undergrowth, cut down the trees, level off the entire place and plant grass seed. By the length of some of the graves, it is evident that a large number of children is buried there. Only two stones contain inscriptions, and they differ from the other stones in size, shape and material. Tracing the inscription on one of them we read:

In memory of Elizabeth Denlinger,
Born, December 5, 1796.
Died May 8, 1819.

Elizabeth Denlinger came with her husband to settle near Fort Holiday, hard on the heels of the retreating Indians, in 1818. She was a native of Strasburg, Lancaster county. We are told that before coming west, she took a leading part in the simple social activities of the community and was quite attractive and a social favorite.

Among her personal friends there were the Brua and the Buckwalter families, even at that time considered old Pennsylvania stock. Elizabeth's maiden name is forgotten, as is the given name of her husband and the exact spot of his grave. The young bride of 20 years, living in the western wilderness, longed continually for her old home in Lancaster county, and died of homesickness three years after leaving there.

Henry Mogul is buried here and, while his grave can be pointed out, the marker bears no inscription. Mogul was a man of considerable influence in the community. He manufactured bricks from the clay dug in his field and burnt them there in Frankstown township more than 100 years ago. One of his grandsons, Newton Mogul, in later years was a member of council in Williamsburg, formerly Aketown.

The other inscribed stone is erected to the memory of Solomon Casner and wife, both of whom died in the early eighties. He was quite prominent in his day, and at one time was superintendent of the Sunday school in East Loop. All others buried here sleep in unknown graves and their identity is lost for ever.

Old Friends Arrive

Sometime during the year of 1818, Daniel Brua, a stalwart young farmer, with his young bride, the former Mary Jane Buckwalter, of Lancaster county, came up the valley. The entire distance was covered on horseback. Lewis, the famous robber, was then in his prime along the trail, so to hide the money in case he appeared, Mrs. Brua sewed their money in the pleated petticoat she wore. Lewis did not molest them on their journey and they settled in the Loop section, not far from the Denlingers.

After the passing of the Denlingers, the farm came into the possession of Hileman and Hammond, owner of the Frankstown furnace, and they prospected for iron ore in the fields. Daniel Brua bought the place from Hileman and Hammond in 1846, and it remains with that family today.

The Last Burial

One evening about 30 years ago a certain farmer was at work in his field not far from the ridge graveyard. About dusk a horse and buggy passed him on the road. At the foot of the ridge a white woman and two Negroes got out of the buggy and climbed the side of the ridge.

A short time afterwards one of the Negroes came down and asked the farmer to lend him a pick and shovel. The farmer complied with the request and the man returned to the ridge. Later, when the three came down again and returned the tools, one of them said they had buried a child in the old graveyard. The farmer saw no evidence of a child living or dead, when they first went up, nor did he ask any questions of them, even after they had volunteered information.

That night a terrific storm broke over the ridge. Above the roar of the storm the barks and howls of dogs could be heard, as though in full cry after their prey or engaged in battle among themselves. The next day the farmer visited the graveyard, and was horrified to find that dogs had dug up the body of the child during the night and mangled it terribly, tearing it limb from limb. He got his pick and shovel and re-buried in a deep grave what was left of the body. The story soon spread over the entire township.

For years afterwards certain farmers' wives insisted that, when at night a storm raged on the ridge, the howls and barks of dogs could be distinctly heard above the noise of the warring elements, and it is true that on several occasions when persons went to the graveyard after a night of storm, they found that animals had dug several holes in the soft earth, as though seeking for a buried treasure.

Whether the farm dames were victims of their imagination or phantom dogs did return is immaterial. Today all is peaceful in the Lost Graveyard.

The new grass is pushing up through the earth, a pledge against future neglect. The same beautiful valley that the homesick Elizabeth looked upon over a century ago still lies smiling before us. In the pear orchard is heard the cheery song of the bob white, from yonder woodland comes the shrill whistle of the hunter, while the call of the distant farmer echoes and re-echoes over the vale.

But from the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead, there comes no answer.

Rebecca Furnace Grave Yard.

There are 47 depressions in this Grave Yard, in addition to graves having markers. Mountain stones are placed at the head and feet of these depressions.

There is no doubt but that some of these depressions represent the resting place of Pioneers who were buried there prior to the interment of Elizabeth Brumbaugh the first Tomb-stone erected in 1805 bearing her name.

This grave yard has from all appearances never had any protection from the Domestic Animals that are allowed to range over it from time to time, with the result that nearly all the Tomb-stones are down and in many cases are so badly broken and scattered that it is impossible to put them in form so as to be able to make out what has been carved on them. The top of a Stone bearing the name of Barbara Gates is still there but the rest of the stone is missing.

PRESBYTERIAN CEMETERY, HOLLIDAYSBURG
Blair County, Pennsylvania.

The old part is one of the oldest in this section of the county. There are 602 graves whose gravestone inscriptions can be deciphered and others whose markers are illegible.

The new part of the cemetery was copied from undertaker's records, which number 1538 burials.

George Guthrie m. 1770 to Margaret Campbell, sister of Adam Holliday's wife
Margaret Campbell Guthrie	d. 1805
George Guthrie	d. July 6, 1789. He was a Revolutionary Soldier.

The three graves - George, his wife Margaret and a son James, were all buried in the Holliday burying ground. This burying ground is on the farm of William Holliday - the first to be buried were his three children who were massacred by the Indians in July 1781 - Patrick, Adam and Janet. The Blair County Historical Society placed a marker on their graves some years ago. The Adam Holliday Chapter D. A. R. placed a marker on the grave of Adam Holliday. And Rev. Lawrence R. Guthrie, a great great grandson has just placed a marker on his grandfather's grave. The Holliday graves were only marked by stones dug out of the ground, for fear of the Indians. The other names are people related to them. The Adam Holliday Chapter has done quite a good deal of work to make the cemetery look better, as a mark of respect to the founder of the Town.
